Excerpt: .came to leave the picture gallery, the guardian told them most civilly that there was no hurry--that he could close later, if milord wanted to stay. Lord Favershall s tip must have been a large one, for when they were going out all the people were very civil--servile almost--in their attentions to them. It all pleased Jenny intimately, and she returned to the hotel with him in the highest spirits. Mother was right, she said; he does love me, and it s very nice to be loved by someone of great position. Besides, he s very handsome and distinguished looking. She dressed to come down to dinner for the first time in a week, and she put on dignity with the dress and jewels, as a girl is apt to do; and she swept down the broad stairs for dinner, for one can t help being a little stately in a train. And the dinner, instead of being a simple little meal, to be hurried over, was ceremonialized into a sort of banquet. The best table in the dining-room had been reserved for milord and his party; beautiful roses were scattered about on it; the landlord himself was in attendance, and, instead of the wine of the country, they had champagne; and, instead of finishing in three-quarters of an hour, the feast lasted for more than two hours; and Lord Favershall was really bright and entertaining, and told one or two rather good stories..
