Pursuant to a congressional request, GAO reviewed the National Weather Services (NWS) acquisition of the Advanced Weather Interactive Processing System (AWIPS), focusing on: (1) how effectively the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) analyzed and defined its system requirements; (2) key risks associated with the acquisition; and (3) whether any risks warranted delay of the contract award. GAO found that: (1) NOAA effectively involved users in analysis and definition of AWIPS requirements; (2) a diverse cross section of NWS users defined AWIPS baseline and functional requirements; (3) NOAA has continued to refine AWIPS functional and interface requirements and faces significant risks, since the roles and responsibilities of the contractor and government are not clear; (4) other risks include a lack of specific system portability requirements, security requirement definitions, and a configuration management plan; and (5) failure to resolve each risk before AWIPS software development begins could cause cost increases, schedule delays, and performance problems. This item ships from La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
