December 10 at 1 p. m. tremendous floods of liquid lava were pouring over the floor of the pit as on December 2. Two streams from the southwest pool covered the south floor, the one going directly across from the end of the arm to the southeast lake, the other following around the wall from the southwest bay. Both cascaded down 4 feet as they drained into the southeast lake. A long stream across the north floor from the west pond was joined by one from the north side of the main lake and the joint flood cascaded with a drop of 10 feet into the east pond pit. A new small pot in the southeast central floor...
