Owing to the difficulty of making acquaintance with those beasts of the earth which we call Mammals, because of their nocturnal, subterranean or aquatic habits, the study of mammalogy has never been as popular as that of the fowls of heaven. It is, however, no less an interesting and profitable study and even yet furnishes the investigator, in spite of the great activity of the past decade in that branch, a far richer field for original zoological study than does ornithology. To man, himself a mammal, the importance of this study, especially as regards his physical, mental and spiritual relationships to...
